The gun, in both full-length and carbine versions, was widely used in subsequent battles against the American Indians. The model 1873 was the fifth variation of the Allin trapdoor design, and was named for its hinged breechblock, which opened like a trapdoor. USA - Hill Country Rifles	Hill Country Long Range Hunter (LRH)	Rifle	Various hunting calibers The PSW stock is a right-hand dedicated design with a comb height, palm swell and overall grip shape that is absolutely perfect for prone shooting, but also great from a sitting or standing position. It does not require an adjustable comb or strap on cheek piece. It is not bulky like a typical tactical stock. This means the LRH is no heavier than a standard weight sporting rifle. The LRH weighs only 7.5 pounds while delivering every design detail needed for optimum long range shooting. Excellent design of the Surgeon XL action allows retention of the same trigger and safety as the Remington M700/40X series rifles. This, combined with a similar bolt cycle movement allows the "feel" of this rifle to be similar to most standard rifles in use across the country. USA - Lamson & Company	Lamson 1865 Palmer Bolt Action Carbine	Carbine	.50 RF Spencer CarbineT Significant as the first metallic cartridge, bolt-action, weapon accepted by the Ordnance Department for issue to the U.S. Army. The Palmer carbine featured a short handle at the rear of the receiver; a quarter turn of the bolt handle unlocks the bolt and pulling it to the rear extracts the fired case and opens the chamber. The hammer is cocked manually before opening. The barrel has a folding, single leaf, rear sight. The sight has three apertures and is graduated to 500 yards. USA - Lawton Machine	Lawton Mod. 7500 Competition	Rifle	6,5 mm-284 Winchester (6,5-284 Win. 6,5 mm-284 Norma) The bolt body and bolt head are held to the tightest tolerance of any other action. Built and designed for benchrest, palma, or F-class competition, the 7500 action runs less than 1-2 10,000ths of an inch tolerance across the bolt face which is as good as or better than any of the competition. The extra thickness of the action reduces harmonics in the gun, helping you achieve the smallest groups possible. The 7500 also has 1/4" extra barrel tenon area, to support a big heavy barrel. USA - Ljutic Industries	Ljutic Recoiless Space Shotgun	Rifle or shotgun	12/76 or 7,62 mm NATO (7,62x51. .308 Winchester) This futuristic-looking trap gun includes many innovative features. The loading/ejection port of this single-shot bolt-action gun is on the bottom of the receiver, which both eases loading and enables shooters to catch empty shells for later re-loading. Its straight design channels recoil directly into the shoulder, which reduces muzzle jump, and a pistol grip adds directional control. A grip-mounted button serves as a trigger mechanism, and a speed lock minimizes firing delay. USA - Marlin	Marlin Mod. 56 Levermatic	Carbine	.22 Short (5,6x11. .22 Kurz) .22 Long (5,6x15,1 .22 LR Z, Lang, Zimmer), .22 LR (5,6x15 .22 lfb) This is an unusual lever-action design. The lever only moves 25 degrees – the rest of the cocking movement is done with cam-and-roller accelerator. It has a one-piece Monte Carlo-type stock, another feature unusual for Marlin, and an enclosed hammer. The fore-end was also round-tipped, which was at the time of introduction (1955) also unusual for Marlin rifles. The receiver was squared and drilled and tapped for a telescopic sight. The stock had a pistol grip wrist, though it is not very deep. The Levermatic differed from the traditional lever-action rifle, such as the Marlin 39A, in that it employed a cam-and-roller system giving it an extremely smooth and short lever motion to reload a new cartridge. This cam-and-roller system was originally invented by Kessler Arms Company for their "Lever-Matic" shotgun. USA - Porter by G. P. Foster	Porter Percussion Turret Rifle	Rifle	.36, .40 or .48 Cal. percussion Only an estimated 300 of these first model rifles were manufactured and 1,250 or less total rifles were Turret manufactured for Porter. The fact that a loaded chamber was facing the shooter likely dissuaded many potential buyers. Chambers opened in all directions, and the weapon was prone to row ignition, all chambers firing in sequence, resulting in fatal accidents because one chamber always faces the marksman. USA - Predator Tactical LLC	Predator Tactical PT500 (500 S&W)	Carbine	.500 Smith & Wesson Magnum (SW, S&W Magn) Predator Tactical .500 S&W. It is a pump action rifle with a 16.5" barrel and a six round tubular Pump action magazine. The basic model comes with a Cerakote® finish in black or tan with Ashely Express sights. It weighs 7 pounds, unloaded. It was developed to maximize the ballistics of the .500 S&W cartridge, developed by Cor-Bon and Smith and Wesson for the X frame revolver. The basic idea is that with a rifle you have a longer barrel, giving the projectile greater velocity. The 1899 Remington-Lee used a 5-round single stack magazine, and had no manual safety. Instead, the cocking piece was designed to be easily gripped and had a half-cock notch. Safe carry was intended to be achieved by placing the rifle in half-cock. In addition to being expensive to manufacture the main design flaw of the rifle was a lack of a recoil lug on the receiver. USA - Remington Arms	Remington Mod. 700 Custom KS Safari	Carbine	.375 H&H Belted Magnum (9,5x72), .458 Winchester Magnum (11,6x63. .458 WM), All Safari rifles start with the exclusive Remington Model 700 bolt design. Unlike Mauser-type bolt actions, there is no ejector cut in the bolt face to weaken the integrity of its design. An unbroken wall of steel surrounds the extractor, making it grip the cartridge head tighter as you extract the spent cartridge. Receivers are machined from solid billets of select ordnance grade steel and barrels are hammer forged, button rifled, and chambered one at a time. There were three in the survey, all with 5-round magazines, nice commercial sporter furniture (probably Bishop)--a checkered fore-end and a buttstock with checkered full pistol grip, monte carlo cheekpiece, and Pachmayr recoil pad. The receiver has the charger bridge and rear sight bracket milled off, and the barrel is lathe-turned. All metal is refinished with a high luster blue. USA - Santa Fe/Golden State Arms	Santa Fe/Golden State 1944, 1945	Carbine	.303 British (7,7x56 R. .303 Lee-Enfield Mk. 7) The Model 1944 exhibits the barrel and receiver gunsmithing of the 1941 Supreme but is fitted with sporterized military furniture. The receiver has the charger bridge and rear sight bracket milled off, and the barrel is lathe-turned. All metal re-finished with a high luster blue. Sights are Williams-type ramp front and folding leaf rear. The buttstock is military but is fitted with a "Santa Fe" red rubber recoil pad. USA - Santa Fe/Golden State Arms	Santa Fe/Golden State Jungle Carbine	Carbine	.303 British (7,7x56 R. .303 Lee-Enfield Mk. 7) With six of these conversions in the survey, this model seems to be the most widely circulated of the Santa Fe Enfields. The Jungle Carbine came originally with a No. 5 rifle buttstock, shortened military fore-end, "Santa Fe" 5-round magazine, and flash hider. Original No. 4 rifle rear sight. One of the six was outfitted with Bishop sporter furniture--probably added after purchase. Overall length is 39 inches, with an 18-1/2 or 19-inch barrel. USA - Savage Arms	Savage 110FP	Carbine	.223Remington, .308 Winchester, .300 WSM, .300 Winchester Magnum The 10FP was introduced a while back and it is a "short" action version of the 110FP (the 110, of course, being a long action). Keep in mind that a savage short action is more like a medium action. While it is shorter then their long action, it is still quite a bit longer then a remington or winchester short action. It is a marked improvement, and the 10FP's shoot the same as the 110FP, and both are offered in a left hand model, which seems to be popular. This allows the rifle to be fired more accurately, because the rifleman's muscular tremors have less time to move the rifle off-aim. A hammerless design is also less likely to jam in brush or clothing. USA - Savage Arms	Savage 99CE Centennial Edition	Carbine	.300 Savage (7,62x48), Only 1000 carbines were made. The Savage 99 was preceded by the Savage 1895, which was the first hammerless lever-action rifle produced.[1] The hammerless design is a useful improvement as it reduces the lock time (the time from trigger pull to firing). This allows the rifle to be fired more accurately, because the rifleman's muscular tremors have less time to move the rifle off-aim. A hammerless design is also less likely to jam in brush or clothing. Sharps/Colt Mod. 78	Rifle	.45-70 Government (11,5x53 R. .45-70 Government Phoenix, Mk I. .45-75 Sharps. .45-85 Marlin, Bullard),This version of the Sharps Model 78 rifle was designed by Bob Swanson of Salt Lake City, Utah. It employed roller bearings at all wear points and had an improved lever with a longer tang and positive lock similar to the one found on Farquharsen rifles. The deluxe walnut stock is not checkered and no provision for sights has been made. A positive safety was added at the rear of the breechblock with the lever extending over the top. The select grade walnut has a fine flame pattern on the right side. USA - Spider Firearms	Ferret 50	Rifle or carbine Bolt action	.50 Browning Machine Gun, .408 CheyTac, .338 Lapua Magnum (8,58x71 mm Finnish. .338 LM) The Ferret 50 is a high-caliber bolt-action rifle developed by Spider Firearms for competition shooting and long-range hunting. The Ferret 50 was crafted as an AR conversion for its high adaptability and customization potential. The stock is made from a polymer. It is a single-shot. It can also be finished in either chrome-moly or stainless steel. One key feature of the Ferret 50 is the fish-gill muzzle-break. This allows the rifle to fire large caliber rounds with controllable recoil but no loss in accuracy. It was accurate and pleasant to shoot, it had a smooth action, and it was sturdy and reliable. There were several improved versions of the rifle produced, until the Second World War made the production of .22 rifles an impractical use of production materials and facilities. USA - Steven J. Arms & Tool Co.	Stevens/Sears 416 Ranger (M 416-2-T)	Rifle	.22 LR (5,6x15 R. .22 lfb), Stevens produced a notable number of military arms, the most common being the Stevens Model 416 bolt action rifle in .22LR caliber. The United States Military used the model 416 as a training rifle around the time of the Second World War. There is some debate and speculation regarding the extent to which the United States military made use of these rifles with their roles almost certainly being limited to basic firearm training. It was accurate; fired rapidly; had a long effective range; and held seven metallic cartridges. It could be fired more rapidly than a Colt-style revolver and reloaded in one-tenth the time. In 1865, the gun maker delivered the Model 1865 Spencer Carbine, modified to correct flaws inherent in the 1860 design. Today, the Model 1865 Spencer, in carbine and rifle, has been recreated by Taylor's & Co. and Armi Chiappa. USA - Volcanic Repeating Arms (New Haven Arms Co.)	Volcanic Lever Action Carbine	Carbine	.41 Volcanic This Volcanic carbine was manufactured by the New Haven Arms Co. circa 1860 and has a polished brass ("gunmetal") receiver and crescent buttplate. Most Volcanic carbines featured factory scroll engraving and examples like this one with a plain finish are rare. The carbine has a 16 inch blued octagon barrel and integral magazine with casehardened hammer, trigger and loading lever. The Volcanic was the grandfather of the famed Winchester rifle. USA - Weatherby	Weatherby Mark V TRR (Threat Response Rifle) Magnum Custom	Rifle Bolt-action	.30-378 Weatherby Magnum (7,8x74, Weatherby, WBY Mag), The TRR is a tactical rifle with a fairly compact and light stock. This stock is also standard on the Weatherby varmint rifles, but not in black. This combines to create a rifle that is easy to handle and well suited to law enforcement tactical use, especially in areas that are more urban in nature. Because of the lighter weight, the rifle has a little more recoil then a heavier rifle like the 700P, but it is still very comfortable to shoot, and offers less recoil then a standard hunting rifle. USA - Winchester	Winchester M 1890/1906 Trombone	Rifle	.22 Short (5,6x11. .22 Kurz) .22 Long (5,6x15,1 .22 LR Z, Lang, Zimmer), .22 LR (5,6x15 .22 lfb)The Trombone design wasn't terribly original. The feed mechanism borrowed heavily from the Remington Model 12 and the firing pin and ejector were basically copied from the Marlin Model 1897. What was original was the locking system. Most hammerless pumps cam the breech block up into a recess in the roof of the receiver. The Trombone cammed the block sideways into the ejection port and the rear of the ejection port was the locking shoulder. USA - Winchester	Winchester M 53	Carbine	.25-20 Winchester, .44-40 Winchester, .32-20 Winchester (8x33 R. 32/20, .32 WCF) In 1924, Winchester introduced the Model 53 lever-action rifle as a more modern version of the 1892 Winchester. The Model 53 was manufactured through 1932 with approximately 25,000 guns produced during the 8-year production period. The Model 53 was discontinued along with several other Winchester models because it could just not compete in sales with the 1894 and the impact of the Great Depression on Winchester Arms. USA - Winchester	Winchester M 55	Rifle Lever action	.30-30 Winchester, .32-20 Winchester, .25-35 Winchester, .32 Winchester CF Special (8x51,5 R) Winchester's lever-action Model 55 is an updated version of their 1894. The complex but reliable receiver mechanism was designed to permit the cycling of longer cartridges than previous Winchester rifles could permit. When the lever is pulled down, it brings the bottom of the receiver with it, opening up more space and allowing a longer cartridge to feed without making the receiver longer. Specific to the Model 55 is an integral ramp front sight. This rifle features an adjustable rear sight. USA - Winchester	Winchester M 94 Short Rifle (M 1894)	Carbine	.38-55 Winchester (.38/55 Marlin, Ballard. 9,65x54 SR), .30-30 Winchester (7,62x51 R. .30/30. .30 WCF) The Model 94 Short is fast to the shoulder. It was a favorite of the range rider who could snatch it from his saddle scabbard and fire faster than prairie lightning. Compact 20 in deeply-blued round barrel and a straight grip walnut stock. It has a rifle-style forearm, black grip cap and a full-length magazine. It's drilled and tapped for scope mounts, and a hammer spur extension is included with the rifle. The sights are traditional with a semi-buckhorn rear and a Marble Arms gold bead at the muzzle. Annie Oakley (born Phoebe Ann Mosey) was an American sharpshooter and exhibition shooter. Her "amazing talent" first came to light at 15 years old, when she won a shooting match against traveling-show marksman Frank E. Butler, whom she eventually married. The couple joined Buffalo Bill's Wild West show a few years later. Oakley became a renowned international star, performing before royalty and heads of state. It is a single-shot .22 rimfire bolt action system, on which the trigger was replaced by a thumb-activated sear behind the bolt. In theory, this was to allow greater accuracy by requiring less force acting to disrupt your point of aim when firing. It was also a simpler and thus cheaper mechanism to manufacture. About 75,000 of these rifles were sold	C2	<input checked="" type="checkbox"/> <input checked="" type="checkbox"/> <input type="checkbox"/> <input type="checkbox"/> <input checked="" type="checkbox"/>

USA - Winchester	Winchester Winder Musket Training	Carbine	.22 Short (5,6x11. .22 Kurz), The Winder musket was the brainchild of Colonel C. B. Winder, who advocated marksmanship training with a rifle of similar size and weight to a service rifle but chambered in .22 rimfire, which was both economical and suitable for indoor ranges. The Winder musket was based on the Winchester Model 1885 rifle. Although it was never officially referred to as the Winder musket, the weapon was informally named in honor of Colonel C. B. Winder, and has since generally been referred to as the Winder musket. USSR	PTR39 Rukavishnikov (PTR-39)	Anti-tank rifle	14,5 mm KPV (14,5x115 Antitank, Russian Machinegun, Vladimirov, Type 56 M-1941) Rukavishnikov designed several types of experimental AT rifles before WWII, including 12.7mm. But PTR-39 had the calibre 14.5mm. Small amounts of PTR-39 were produced in 1939-1940, but the production was stopped because of mistake of Soviet generals: they thought that armor of new German tanks was very thick for penetration by AT rifles. The consequences of that great mistake were horrible - in June 1941 Soviet Army didn't have AT rifles in sizeable amounts, but PTR-39 could easily destroy Pz.I, Pz.II, LT-35 and LT-38	C2	<input type="checkbox"/> <input type="checkbox"/> <input type="checkbox"/> <input type="checkbox"/> <input checked="" type="checkbox"/>
