Hungary - FEG	FEG Mannlicher 1895	Rifle	8x50 R Austrian Mannlicher (8 mm Austrian Mannlicher, Bulgarian Mannlicher) The M1895 differed in several important respects from the earlier service rifles, for example, it had a full-length handguard and a leaf-pattern rear sight. Sling swivels lay on the under-edge of the butt and under the barrel-band, while the nose cap (which carried the stacking hook) had the bayonet lug on its underside. The magazine clip could be ejected by opening the bolt and pressing the catch in the front edge of the trigger guard. This rifle was the principal Austro-Hungarian rifle of WW1. Even with the outbreak of war in September 1939, Britain did not dramatically increase the output of small arms at Ishapore. Therefore, production of rifles in 1939 and 1940 was only slightly higher than through the Depression years of the 1930's. In addition, a large percentage of pre-war Ishapore production was lost with the surrender of Singapore in 1942 (nearly 300,000 rifles). Therefore, 1940 Ishapore rifles are rather scarce. Italy - Beretta	Beretta 501 Sniper	Carbine	7,62 mm NATO (7,62x51, .308 Winchester) The Beretta M501 sniper rifle is the Italian Army sniper rifle. The integral harmonic balancer, contained within a tube hidden in the forend of the stock, is used to reduce the vibrations of the barrel, helping to improve accuracy. The rifle has been around since the mid 80's, and has earned a solid reputation as a fine sniper rifle. It could probably even be better with a synthetic stock, though the contour of the current stock is excellent. The rifle is issued with 1.5-6x42mm Zeiss scope. Italy - Chiappa Armi, Chiappa Firearms USA	Chiappa 1860 Spencer Carbine	Carbine	.56-50 Spencer RF Tappered Long case, .44-40 Winchester, .45 Long Colt The 1860 Spencer Carbine has been manufactured by Armi Sport recreating faithfully every part in detail, all the components are made from a solid piece of steel and NC machined, in this way all parts are fully interchangeable with original parts. The original caliber was 56/50 Spencer rimfire, where unlike usual cartridge designation the first number referred to the diameter of the case and head, while the second number referred to the diameter at the mouth. Chiappa Firearms has been building one of the best reproductions of the 1874 Sharps available today. This elegant, small frame version of the 1874 Sharps dropping block action has been reduced in size by 20% while the weight is about a half of the original rifle. It has a case colored receiver and a two piece, straight grip walnut stock with a steel butt plate and schnable forend tip	C2 Rounds 1 Barrel 24 or 26" Weight 5,5 or 6 lbs Length 37,7 or 39,7"	<input checked="" type="checkbox"/> <input checked="" type="checkbox"/> <input type="checkbox"/> <input type="checkbox"/> <input checked="" type="checkbox"/>

This model of the carbine was produced from existing M.1891 rifles from the time of the Great War. Manufacturing of this specialist carbine began in 1898. The TS was intended to serve as a handy rifle for non-infantry units such as artillery units. Early models were paired with a side-mounting bayonet that rotated into position. This was later abandoned and a standard M91 bayonet. Production halted in 1919. After the invasion of China, all Arisaka production was required for use of the Imperial Army, so under the terms of the Anti-Comintern Pact, the Imperial Navy contracted with Italy for this weapon in 1937. The Type I is based on the Type 38 rifle and utilizes a Carcano action, but retains the Arisaka/Mauser type 5-round box magazine. The Type I was utilized primarily by Japanese Imperial Naval Forces. The few 7.35mm M38s that were retained by Italy went to a Fascist youth organization that was organized into a militia. Most were modified into M91/38 configuration (6.5mm) for the Italian military. About 40,00-60,000 7.35mm M38s were sold to Finland, and were issued to support personnel. The Finns didn't like them. There was one modification to the Finn M38s, the fixed rear sight notch was altered for a 150 meter battlesight zero. In 1860 B.T. Henry was granted a patent for the design of a new gun using metallic cartridges. The novelty was so important that the new gun was named Henry and the cartridges bore his marking H in as the inventor. This was the first true repeating rifle to be made in the history of firearms, one man could load 15 cartridges in eight to ten seconds with this rifle, which was equivalent of having fifteen men manned with traditional firearms. Italy - Uberti	Uberti 1873 Carbine Steel	Carbine Lever Action	.44-40 Winchester, .45 Long Colt, .357 Magnum The bronze frame and the low power of the original .44 Henry rimfire cartridge limited the 1866 rifle's versatility. In 1873, continuing the process of improving the lever action design, Winchester introduced a new steel-framed rifle firing the more potent .44/40 center fire cartridge. Marketed by Colt, the product had a short run, though no fault of its own. Colt stopped making lever-action guns in 1884 after producing only 3,810 rifles and 2,593 carbines, when Winchester, threatened by Colt's encroachment into the lever-action rifle business, made it known that it planned to go after Colt's single-action revolver business. Japan - Dickson, Howa	Dickson Howa Golden Bear	Rifle	.30-06 NATO Springfield (7,62x63. .30 Browning, Springfield) it's a pretty good copy of a Sako Finnbear. Howa had license to make copies of some Sako parts, but took the liberty of cloning the entire rifle. Sako wasn't thrilled about that, and somehow (probably lawsuit) convinced Howa to cease production. The Murata Type 18 is most readily distinguished from the Type 13 by the bolt stop being a cross pin which is mounted and locked from the left side of the stock, below the receiver, rather than being mounted on the bolt as in the Mauser. Japan - Jinsen Arsenal, Korea Kokura Arsenal	Arisaka Type 99 (T99, Last Ditch)	Rifle	7,7 mm Japanese Arisaka (7,7x58, Rimless, Type 99) At the end of war rifles were made from low quality steel without thermal treatment and so the rifles can be dangerous for the user. For collections only! Although the Type 38 Rifle was an excellent rifle, the small caliber (6.5 mm) bullet it fired was not considered effective enough as an anti-material round. The Imperial Japanese Army (IJA) developed the Type 99 based on the Type 38 but with a caliber of 7.7 mm. Japan - Tokyo Koishikawa Arsenal	Arisaka Type 38 (38th Year Meiji Rifle)	Rifle Bolt action	6,5 mm Arisaka (6,5x50,8, Meiji 30, Type 38) From 1905 3 400 000 were produced The Type 38 rifle Arisaka was a bolt-action rifle. For a time it was the standard rifle of the Japanese infantry. It was reliable and accurate. It was known also as the Type 38 Year Meiji Carbine in Japan. An earlier, similar weapon was the Type 30 Year Meiji Rifle, which was also used alongside it. Both of these weapons were also known as the Arisaka, after the inventor. Japan - Tokyo Koishikawa Arsenal	Arisaka Type 38 Cavalry (Short)	Carbine Bolt action	6,5 mm Arisaka (6,5x50,8, Meiji 30, Type 38) This rifle is a fairly common version of the Type 38 rifle. It's estimated that approximately 100,000 were re-manufactured from long rifles returned to the arsenal for overhaul. The barrels were shortened to 25" & a new front sight with protector ears was installed. The only way to tell these from a Buba gunsmith special is by the step in the barrel just behind the front barrel band. This is the point to which the arsenal turned down the diameter of the original barrel so the front band, sight & bayonet would fit. Japan - Tokyo Koishikawa Arsenal	Arisaka Type 44 Meiji Cavalry Carbine	Carbine Bolt action	6,5 mm Arisaka (6,5x50,8, Meiji 30, Type 38) This rifle is also often referred to as a Type 44 Carbine. It was a development of the Arisaka Type 38 Cavalry Rifle, the main difference being the bayonet is a needle type and it can be folded backwards and locks underneath the barrel. The Type 44 also included a compartment in the buttstock for which to store a unique 2-piece cleaning rod. The cleaning rod storage compartment was accessed via an ingenious rotating door. Japan - Tokyo Koishikawa Arsenal	Arisaka Type 66 Siamese (38)	Rifle Bolt action	8 mm Siamese Mauser (8x52 R. Type 66) The Type 66 was basically a copy of the Type 38 Japanese Arisaka make under contract by the Tokyo arsenal for Siam. Despite bearing a very close resemblance to the Type 38 Arisaka, it and the Type 66 have virtually zero interchangeable parts – even the screws in the Type 66 are cut to a different thread pitch. The stocks are shorter, the bands are held by machine screws instead of springs, the front sight base is integral to the barrel, and the rear sight is of the Mauser tangent type	C1 <input type="checkbox"/> <input type="checkbox"/> <input type="checkbox"/> <input type="checkbox"/> <input checked="" type="checkbox"/> Rounds 5 Barrel 800 Weight Lenght

It has a non-rotating bolt (the part of the action that seals the rear end of the barrel) locked by a rotating bolt handle, and reputedly a smooth action. Norway - Kongsberg Vapenfabrikk	Kongsberg Krag - Pettersson Mod. 1872	Rifle	12,17x44 mm Rimfire The Krag-Petersson rifle was the first repeating rifle adopted by the armed forces of Norway, and one of the first repeating arms used anywhere in the world. Developed by Ole Herman Johannes Krag, the action of the Krag-Petersson was uniquely actuated by the oversized hammer. Another distinguishing feature was that the cartridge rising from the magazine was not seated automatically, but had to be pushed into the breech of the rifle. Testing by the Norwegian military revealed that the Krag-Petersson was a robust, accurate and quick firing weapon, and the Royal Norwegian Navy adopted the rifle in 1876	C1 <input type="checkbox"/> <input type="checkbox"/> <input type="checkbox"/> <input type="checkbox"/> <input checked="" type="checkbox"/>

Norway - Kongsberg Vapenfabrikk	Kongsberg Krag Jorgensen Mod. 1894 "Stomperud" Carbine	Rifle Bolt action	6,5 mm Mauser (6,5x55, Norwegian Krag) When the Germans occupied Norway, they took advantage of the arms production facilities at the Kongsberg Arsenal to make a number of Krag rifles to their own specifications. They were made with a mixture of new parts and existing rifles, and all retained the Norwegian 6.5x55mm chambering. The German features were elements like sights, sight hood, and bayonet lug that duplicated those of a Kar98k. Philippines - Armstrong, USA	Armstrong M 22TCM	Carbine	.22 TCM (Tuason-Craig Magnum) Aesthetically, it did not come across as especially elegant but still is far from being plain-looking. An appealing and very practical feature of the TCM Rifle is that it can feed off the same high-capacity magazine (17 rounds). This is in keeping up with the current industry trend of producing pistols and carbines that can feed from the same magazines for logistical simplicity. The TCM Rifle will, however, be supplied with a cut-down 5-round magazine that fits flush in the rifle's magazine well. This model designation applies to those Polish wz.1898 rifles (basically, Polish copies of Gew.98), that were arsenally upgraded to the K.29 short rifle configuration. Other than fitting a shorter barrel, the most obvious change was shortening of a Gew.98 style stock, to make it look like K.29 stock. The buttstock sling swivel was moved backwards and the hole was filled with a plug. The front and rear sights were upgraded to the K29 standard. Like the Swede target rifles, these were selected after test firing for their accuracy. The Finns used these in European Prone matches (kind of their equivalent of our HP) into the 90's when they came out with their current rifle. Has aperture sights, a target stock made of arctic birch with rails on the bottom and side for hand stop/sling attachment, and a 2 stage match trigger (which is pretty smooth). Russia - Tula Weapon Factory	TOZ 109	Carbine	7,62 mm NATO (7,62x51, .308 Winchester), 7,62x39 Kalashnikov (.30 Russian) The TOZ-109 is magazine-fed. The folding rear leaf sight is not considered to be very good, but it is adequate for up to mid-range shots, and the TOZ-109 is really meant to be used at long range with telescopic sights. This means that the TOZ-109 is, of course, drilled and tapped for a telescopic sight mount. The standard version uses a beech or birch stock. Soth Korea - Daewoo	Daewoo K14 Sniper (XK14)	Rifle Bolt action	7,62 mm NATO (7,62x51, .308 Winchester) The K14 is a bolt action rifle with turn-bolt action. It is a very typical bolt action with not too many special or exotic features. Since Korea has virtually no experience in this field, it's natural that they were not trying to venture into something totally new and unproven. The K14 has some 'modern' features in its action, of course. For example, its bolt opens at 60 degrees to allow faster repeating shots, and the manual safety moves 90 degrees for on/off, while the original M70 moves 180 degrees. It is a rather unremarkable design with a precision barrel and a wooden shoulder stock. Scope-mounting holes are drilled into the receiver and iron sights are fitted as a backup. For crowd-control work, the muzzle can be used to fire a variety of low-velocity rifle grenades, such as flash-bang grenades, tear gas, or smoke shells, giving the C-75 added versatility for the law enforcement role. Ironically, Garate actually registered their own patent on the design since Winchester hadn't bothered to, and that patent was enforced, since Garate did make the guns in Spain. In the early 1930s the Spanish Monarch was overthrown and the Republicans took over the country. Until this time Spain had but one police force, the Guardia Civil, and they were loyal to the Monarch. The Republican government created a new police force, La Guardia de Asalto (Assault Guards), that was loyal to them and took over the everyday policing duties in larger towns and cities. Spain - Oviedo Arsenal	Oviedo Mauser Spanish Destroyer Carbine M 1921	Carbine	9x23 Bergmann Bayard (9 mm Long, Largo, Lange, Astra, Star Trust, Bayard) It was used by Spanish police and prison services, including the Guardia Civil from the mid 1930s until the late 1960s, replacing the El Tigre Rifle. It is essentially a scaled down Model 1893 Mauser with two rear-mounted locking lugs and a Mauser-style two-position flip safety. The Destroyer fired the same ammunition as the standard-issue police handgun and took the same magazines, however the longer rifle barrel resulted in greater muzzle velocity and accuracy, and subsequently range. Value		Bolt action	The Carl Gustav m/42 recoilless anti-tank rifle is breech-loading single shot weapon built to use Davis recoil-less principle. Its barrel is open at the rear and fitted with swing-out breechblock / venturi nozzle, which allows some powder gases to escape to the rear and counter the recoil of the discharge. Specially designed cartridges have 'blown-out' bases that allows the hot gases to escape both ways - to the front, pushing out the projectile, and to the rear and out of the funneled breechblock / nozzle,	Rounds 1	Barrel 1114

Sweden - Carl Gustaf	Carl Gustaf FM23-36 Target	Rifle	6,5x55 mm Mauser- Krag Jorgensen (6,5 mm Skan, Mauser, Mauser- Krag- Jorgensen) The fm/23 was a standard m/96 rifle equipped with a heavier barrel and a stock shortened to a sporting or target match configuration. Lyman receivers sights (M48) were installed, providing a range of 100 to 1,000 meters. The bolt had the thumbpiece removed to increase lock time, and the trigger pull was lightened for competitive shooting. The fm/23-36 differed only in that it was equipped with a thumb-hole target-style stock and the receivers lacked the thumbcut for clip loading. Starting in 1889, 100,000 rifles were converted to fire the 8X58R centerfire smokeless round. These converted rifles were rebarreled, rehardened, got new hammers, new breech blocks, and an improved extractor system. This 8mm round is a Danish designed cartridge that was later used in the Krag rifle. Sweden - Husqvarna	Husqvarna M 4100 Series	Carbine	.243 Winchester, .270 Winchester CF, .30-06 Springfield, .308 Winchester, 7 mm Remington Magnum The Husqvarna 4100 has a Mauser like action (long claw, non-rotating extractor). Problem with the 4100 series, and the all steel 1640 action series, is that the safety is a trigger only safety. SO, if you want to single load a round into the chamber over the top of a full magazine, you have an unsafe, loaded weapon until you get that round in there and lock the safety again. But the firing pin is not locked in place during that loading maneuver	C1	<input checked="" type="checkbox"/> <input checked="" type="checkbox"/> <input type="checkbox"/> <input type="checkbox"/> <input checked="" type="checkbox"/>

The Model 8000 (the base model) fires a good selection of cartridges, and is drilled and tapped for a telescopic sight; it is also known as the Grade III pattern. The Model 9000 is identical for game purposes, but is a simpler form of the Model 8000, and is also known as the Grade II pattern. Following this, the Swedes chose the Mauser design based rifle to shoot this round. The Swedish Mauser was manufactured relatively unchanged from 1896 to 1938. The Swedes were way ahead of the curve on using smaller caliber cartridges for military rounds, adopting the 6.5x55mm round in 1893, way before the introduction of the 5.56 NATO and other small caliber rounds around 70 years later. Switzerland - AMSD	AMSD OM50 Nemesis (Mk I, Mk II and Mk III) (OM-50)	Rifle or carbine	.50 Browning Machine Gun (12,7x99 NATO. .50 BMG) The concept, for what later became the "Nemesis" large caliber sniper rifle, was devised in 2001 by two former military, the retired US Marine Corps officer, James Owens and the Swiss Chris Movigliatti. First prototype was tested only 3 months after the design inception. In 2003, first production batch of rifles was made by AMSD, a Swiss company, highly specialized in the design of precision military light armament. The new weapon was officially christened as the OM 50 Nemesis (OM standing for names of the designers, 50 for caliber and Nemesis for the ancient Greek goddess of justice and vengeance). Switzerland - Schmidt - Rubin	Schmidt - Rubin (Swiss) 1905 Cavalry Carbine	Carbine	7,5x53,5 Schmidt- Rubin M 1890 (Schmidt- Rubin Hunting SFM) In 1905, the Model 1905 Cavalry Carbine was introduced to replace the older, and unpopular, 1893 Carbines. The 1905 was fully stocked to the muzzle, and had no provisions for mounting a bayonet. The 1905 retained the Model 1893s unique rear sight, The sight essentially has two parts. A fixed sight, set at 200m, and a fold down quadrant sight which was adjustable up to 1500m. The 1905 also mimicked the 1893s sling arrangement by having a slot in the buttstock for attaching a sling. Switzerland - SIG	SIG Mondragon 1894 Type II A	Carbine	5,2x68 Mondragon (5,2 mm Polte Long Neck), 6x48 Clair- Mondragon (Mondragon, Long), Early Mondragon bolt-action design, model of 1894. Prior to designing his self-loading 1908 rifle (which is notable as the first self-loader adopted by a national military), Manuel Mondragon created this bolt action design. He was working in Switzerland at the time, and the guns were actually built by SIG. It is a straight-pull bolt action design, but the utility of rapid repeating fire was in its nascent stages. The Netherlands - Hembrug Zaandam	Dutch 1895 (M 95)	Rifle	6,5x53,5 R Dutch Mannlicher (6,5x54 R. 6,7x53 R. .256 Mannlicher Rimmed), The Model 1895 Dutch rifle and carbines made at Hembrug and other manufactures are not junk but do not have the romance attached to them as other weapons. During WWII many were used in german service. The carbine is perhaps the most interesting as the stock is rather unusual looking. It has a portion of the stock covering the left side of the receiver to prevent the weapon catching on the saddle scabbard when drawn. The Netherlands - Hembrug Zaandam	Dutch Mannlicher 1895 Carbine (M 95)	Carbine	6,5 mm Dutch [and Romanian] Mannlicher (6,5x53 R, .256 Mannlicher) The Dutch Mannlicher, also known as the M.95 (Model 1895), was the service rifle of the Armed forces of the Netherlands between 1895 and 1945 which replaced the obsolete Beaumont-Vitali M1871/88. At first it was produced by Steyr Mannlicher for the Dutch, but after 1904, production took place under license at Hembrug Zaandam in the Netherlands. It was based on the earlier Mannlicher 1893 offered by Steyr to Romania, which was itself a somewhat modernized version of the German Model 1888	C1	<input type="checkbox"/>	<input type="checkbox"/>	<input type="checkbox"/>	<input type="checkbox"/>	<input checked="" type="checkbox"/>

Turkey Value	Enfauser (Long Lee)	Rifle Bolt action	8x57 IS Mauser (Target) (7,92x57 S Mauser 1904, IS JS, German Army Rifle 1924) The Enfauser was a bolt-action service rifle of the Ottoman Empire and later Turkish Republic derived from Lee-Enfield rifles captured during the Gallipoli Campaign and Turkish revolution. These rifles were altered to use a Mauser barrel and 5-round internal box magazine during the 1930s arms-standardization program of the fledgling Turkish Republic. Basically, they were a Lee-Enfield and Mauser hybrid, with the name being a contraction of Enfield and Mauser. UK - BSA (Birmingham Small Arms)	BSA Lee Enfield No. 1, No. 2	Carbine	.22 LR (5,6x15 .22 lfb), .22 Short (5,6x11. .22 Kurz) Introduced in 1908, the Model No.1 rifle was a target rifle in the minimal sense. It, and its bolt action successors to the BSA range of .22 rimfire rifles, could quite reasonably have been considered to be more of a sporting nature in appearance - indeed, in later years that is more or less where it, and the following Model No.2, eventually fell in the marketing scheme of things once they were superseded by the more accurate Martini actioned rifles. UK - BSA (Birmingham Small Arms)	BSA Lee Enfield No. 8 Mk I	Carbine	.22 LR (5,6x15 .22 lfb) This rifle significantly increased enthusiasm towards small-bore target rifle shooting post-war (WWII) and was in part responsible for a resurgence of both military and civilian small-bore service style competition. To this day it is still in use by Cadet units and continues to fulfill the criteria of the task for which it was designed. Such has been the level of usage of the No.8 rifles that it proved necessary in more recent years to return many for Factory Thorough Repair (FTR). UK - BSA (Birmingham Small Arms)	BSA Martini International Mk Mk I, Mk III	Rifle	.22 LR (5,6x15 .22 lfb), These rifles were probably designed in the very late 1950s and built and tested in 1959 to 1960, since the production model was announced early in 1961 after considerable modification. The prototype rifles, the first Internationals with fully-floating barrels, employed a steel under-barrel hanger, rivetted into the front of the action, which supported the fore-end furniture clear of the barrel for its entire length. The hanger also needed to be strong enough to counter the load applied by the single-point rifle sling	C2	<input checked="" type="checkbox"/> <input checked="" type="checkbox"/> <input type="checkbox"/> <input type="checkbox"/> <input checked="" type="checkbox"/>

They are thus not fully-floating barrels and accuracy, whilst excellent under constant hold, can be affected by varying sling tension for instance. This is not to denigrate the rifles, which are still admirable in almost every respect; simply to warn that great care is needed to achieve the best results of which these rifles are capable - and they surely are. UK - RSAF Enfield	RSAF Lee Enfield Snider Rifle 1862 Mk I (Mark I) (Nepalese Snider Enfield)	Rifle	.577 Snider (14,6x50,7 R. .577 Snider Solid case 2") Muzzle loading rifles of the .577 inch Enfield pattern 1853 were converted and re-designated Mk I Snider/Enfield. This system was also adopted by Denmark and the United States. Most of the success of this system was due to the introduction of the brass cased boxer cartridge, which expanded on firing to provide a gas seal to the rear of the bullet, the first British official arm where the cartridge was designed to do the work of stopping the escape of gas at the breech. UK - RSAF Enfield	RSAF Short Rifle Mk I, II (Mark 1, 2)	Carbine Bolt action	.22 LR (5,6x15 .22 lfb) The RF Short Rifle was a conversion of various marks of the "Long" Lee-Enfield or Lee-Metford to a .22" training rifle. Issue of the Mark I commenced late in 1907, whilst the Mark I* arrived on the scene in 1912 after approval the previous year. The intention of these conversions was to provide a miniature rifle with similar weight and balance characteristics to the then issued Short Magazine Lee-Enfield, which was superseding the "Long Lee". UK - Swing Firearms	Swing Target Mk III (Mark 3, Sin 71 M 4)	Rifle	7,62 mm NATO (7,62x51, .308 Winchester) The Swing rifle was a design developed by a number of target shooting enthusiasts.. The design's primary instigators were George Swenson and Laurie Ingram. At the time target rifle competition in the UK was dominated by designs based on military actions such as those of the Lee Enfield and Mauser 1898. These designs were felt to have reached the limits of their development potential; especially when combined with commercially manufactured or hand-loaded ammunition. UK, USA	Pattern 13 (Enfield 1917)	Rifle Bolt action	.276 Enfield P-13 .303 British (7,7x56 R, Lee-Enfield Mk. 7) .30-06 Springfield (7,62x63, .300 Browning) The rifle itself was redesigned in the .303 cartridge, to be manufactured in large numbers by American firms under contract. It would also be refitted for the .30-06 cartridge and used in large numbers by the American armed forces as the M1917 Enfield rifle. The Pattern 13 rifle itself was excellent - it balanced and handled well, it had very good sights, and a smooth and fast bolt throw. However, the .276 Enfield cartridge was really more potent than it needed to be, and caused problems. USA	M 40T2 Tactical	Rifle	.260 Remington (6,5x64, 6,5-08 A-Square) The forend area of the stock is what is known as a "beavertail" style forend and if you imagine a wide, flat beavertail, then you have the general idea of the shape of the stock. The beavertail forends have been around for a long while and for good reason, they provide a very stable platform when shooting from a rifle rest such as sandbags. The beavertail on the T2 stock is right about 2.5" (64mm) wide and 1.25" (32mm) high at the front end. It's loud, proud, and very purposely designed. It's meant to be a bar none working field rifle and extend the range of the "standard" hunting rifle. Today's hunter often requires more than what their daddy's 30-06 was capable of and here's our answer. The name pretty much speaks for itself. So, many sound suppressors can be screwed directly onto the barrel without the need for an adaptor. The long, 26" barrel in the .338 Lapua enhances muzzle velocity, flatness of trajectory, and terminal ballistics. The 24" barrel of the .300 Win Mag balances ballistic performance with portability. USA - AWC Systems Technologies	AWC M 91 BDR	Rifle	7,62 mm NATO (7,62x51. .308 Winchester), The AWC M91 BDR (Breakdown Rifle) is the only reliable system that meets the requirement for a "Takedown" centerfire rifle. We have tested many designs with removable barrels and have found the point of impact shift to be beyond the acceptable level. Premature overall accuracy deterioration is potentially great with the removable barrel rifles. Other designs break down at the wrist where the rifle stock is the weakest, sacrificing stock integrity. USA - Bullard Repeating Arms	Bullard Sporting (Large Frame, Small Frame)	Rifle Lever action	.32-40, .38-45, .40-75, .40-60, 45-70, .45-85, 50--95, 50-110. Made from 1886 to 1890, these were produced in two models , a small frame and a large frame. The Bullard was considered a superior design levergun at the time. The magazine had a unique mechanism to allow it to be loaded from the bottom. It also had a magazine cut-off that allowed the levergun to be loaded and fired single shot with the magazine full. No matter how good it was, the small company could not compete with Marlin and Winchester and it soon went under. USA - D&L Sports, Inc.	D&L MR30PG (MR-30PG)	Rifle or carbine	7,62 mm NATO (.308 Winchester), .300 Winchester Magnum, .300 Winchester Short Magnum The MR-30 PG rifle system is completed on a new Nesika Bay action in the caliber of choice. The Nesika Bay action is used for its reliability, accuracy, and overall quality. Total weight and length of the completed rifle depends on customer request, selected options, and barrel contour. The expected use environment should be a consideration when requesting an approximate weight. The MR-30 PG will be the heavier component of the two rifle concept and generally used from a distant static position. USA - D&L Sports, Inc.	D&L MR700 Marksman's Rifle (MR-700)	Rifle or carbine	7,62 mm NATO (.308 Winchester), .300 Winchester Magnum, .300 Winchester Short Magnum The stock of the MR-700 rifle is an MR-30PG aluminum style stock designed to accept the M-700 barreled action. The stock needs no separate floor plate assembly, thus it eliminates the torque setting loss often encountered with the light duty factory 700 floor plate. The forearm is flat-bottomed to allow for stable support, as well as having multiple rigid mounting locations for the bipod.
